Internet of Things (IOT) is all about linking devices to the Internet and creating networks. IOT integrates various devices and services connected to the Internet and is more efficient and advanced over traditional networks. The concept of the Internet of Things is pervasive and the prevalent use of WiFi is the tip of an iceberg. Recent studies predict a 40 Billion IoT connected devices and billions of transactions daily by 2020. It is difficult to predict the IoT future and its business scenario. There are two major trends that have appeared in the internet scenario; the demand of connecting more devices to the internet and the use of mobile devices. All new innovative ideas are being taken into consideration by the researchers. Apple's AirPods provide an example to understand the usage of IOT. This innovation is based on enabling users to connect their wireless headphones to their iPhone devices. Botswana is the country that leads in the adoption of the Internet of Things (IoT) technology, according to a report by the Internet of Things Data Analysis Workshop. It forecast that Botswana will be the world leader in the IoT industry, surpassing Europe and the US. Adi Bakhisho, a lecturer from the University of Botswana, was part of the group that led the report. According to him, Botswana has seen the highest growth in the adoption of IoT technology by companies in Africa compared to other parts of the world. The two most popular reasons for adoption were ease of integration and cost saving. Botswana is very well placed to lead the IoT industry because they have made it easier for companies to adopt the technology, said Bakhisho. "We have a good network across the country. It is easier for a business to be integrated than in other parts of the world. That is why we are leading the way in IoT adoption," he said. The report concluded that the prices of IoT applications will drop in 2018. Botswana will further strengthen its position as the leader in IoT adoption in Africa.
