European Commission Commissioner Margrethe Vestager in Brussels, Belgium, April 11, 2017. REUTERS/Francois Lenoir BRUSSELS (Reuters) - European Competition Commissioner Margrethe Vestager will meet France's new president, Emmanuel Macron, on Tuesday, her office said on Friday. Vestager said in December that she wanted to meet with Macron as a formal first contact and to "understand his ideas on competition and on issues related to the internal market". Macron won presidential election on May 7, pledging to make France a magnet for global businesses and to fight anti-competitive practices. He is a close ally of former president François Hollande, who in December announced his government would be submitting to the European Court of Justice two investigations into alleged violations of EU competition rules by Siemens and two French energy groups. Siemens Chief Executive Joe Kaeser has also welcomed the opportunity to speak with Vestager, saying last week his company "will comply with European laws as is our legal duty, and we are ready to cooperate with the Commission to further strengthen this position." Vestager also said she had received a letter last week from Siemens requesting to be exempted from the investigation. She said it was not unusual for competitors to send letters of protest when they are under investigation, but that her staff would decide what to do with it. "It seems to be quite a different step," Vestager said. "I am going to discuss this letter with the president and the prime minister." Once a Danish liberal, Vestager became Europe's most high-profile competition regulator when she took up the role in 2014. Overseeing the world's largest economy is no easy task, with several cases and investigations targeting Apple Inc AAPL.O, Google GOOGL.O, Siemens SIEGn.DE and Starbucks SBA.O, among others. "The president of the Republic does have the status of a judge, it is no secret that I do not like to break the news to people too late, it may be that I will break this to the president," Vestager told a news conference.
