of the current study indicated that maternal serum HGF levels were significantly higher in women who developed OHSS (n = 18) than in those who did not (n = 10). The correlation between maternal serum HGF and β -hCG levels, and also between maternal serum HGF and E2 levels in the HCG-group, suggested a possibility of HGF being associated with the initiation of OHSS. In the current study, both maternal serum β -hCG and E2 levels in the HCG-group were significantly higher during OHSS treatment than during non-treatment. In the OHSS-group, maternal serum β -hCG levels were significantly lower during non-treatment than during therapy. In a previous study, Vistakuru et al ([@R38]) observed significantly lower serum β -hCG levels during the first week of treatment in women who subsequently developed OHSS (n = 6) compared with those who did not (n = 11). Similar results were reported by Aoyagi et al ([@R39]), who observed lower serum β -hCG levels at treatment initiation in women who subsequently developed OHSS (n = 16) compared with those who did not (n = 57). Our results and those of the cited studies ([@R38]--[@R41]) agree with the results of our study. In the present study, maternal serum HGF levels were significantly higher in the OHSS group than in the control group at the start of therapy. Maternal serum HGF levels were significantly higher during non-treatment than during treatment in the OHSS group, and in the control group. During non-treatment, maternal serum HGF levels were significantly higher in the OHSS group than in the control group. Maternal serum β -hCG levels were higher in the OHSS group than in the control group at treatment initiation, and significantly lower during treatment than during non-treatment in the OHSS group. Maternal serum β -hCG and HGF levels were negatively correlated in the control group. In the OHSS group, maternal serum β -hCG and HGF levels were not correlated. The results of the current study and that of Muto et al ([@R42]) are consistent with the results of a previous study reporting negative correlations between serum β -hCG and HGF in patients with endometriosis ([@R43]). In the current study, maternal serum HGF levels were not correlated with maternal age
