Crack.The present invention relates to an output apparatus and more particularly to a method for arranging electrodes of an electrode array connected to an electronic instrument. An electronic instrument such as a printer, a duplicator, a facsimile apparatus or the like using an electrode array (array of electrodes) has a possibility of causing short-circuiting of the electrodes due to adhesion of foreign matter, wear of the electrodes or the like. Therefore, the electrodes of the electrode array should be arranged and connected with the electrodes of a printed circuit board (hereinafter, referred to as printed circuit board) in a manner such that short-circuiting between the electrodes is avoided. Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication No. HEI9(1997)-347182 proposes a method in which electrode terminals projecting in the longitudinal direction of the electronic instrument are first soldered to the electrodes on the printed circuit board and then the electrode terminals are connected to the electrodes of the electrode array. More specifically, the electrode terminals are disposed on the printed circuit board, and simultaneously with the soldering of the electrode terminals to the electrodes on the printed circuit board, the electrode terminals are bent in the widthwise direction of the printed circuit board to a direction of the electrodes of the electrode array. With the conventional method, however, since the electrode terminals projected in the longitudinal direction of the electronic instrument are bent as described above, the degree of freedom for the arrangement of the electrodes is reduced. Therefore, the length of the electrodes in the longitudinal direction of the electronic instrument is limited depending on the arrangement of the electrode terminals. In addition, since the electrode terminals are simply bent in the widthwise direction of the printed circuit board
