Will you discover your potential and be able to stand out in the world? It's time to discover! (Update 06/11/2018) Hi! As you probably know I'm a big fan of the Star Wars universe. It's a series that has made me dream from a very young age, and that I've always considered my first love. The very same thing happened in the world of gaming. I was watching streams when I found out about Free To Play games. I thought: This is it! This is what I've always been looking for! I want to create my very own game in this universe! I started by creating an idea of what I'd like my game to be. The game has now evolved a lot and I really love it. I hope that you will enjoy it. I also decided to create an indie game. This is why it took me a long time to release the game! I always wanted to create something that was important to me. This is why I really hope you'll give it a try and that you'll find it easy to play, easy to understand, and that you'll find it inspiring. c9d1549cdd

www.youtube.com/maracaspro A wisp of wind. A forgotten dream. A waterfall. A home and a family. Three lovers, forever by a river. Q: QFileSystemModel and QStandardItemModel for tree-view I have a "Cats" and "Livestock" categories in a list and want to sort them both as tree-view. The idea is, that each category is it's own hierarchy (as is, for example, the Windows file system). That is to say that the name of the top of the tree should be the name of the category. I would like to use QFileSystemModel and QStandardItemModel. I found several code samples on the Internet and on StackOverflow that looked like they might help, but I'm struggling with the syntax. The closest I've come is the following. I have a test tree structure created by using QStringListModel: QStringList model; model.append(QString("Cats")); model.append(QString("-") + QString("-")); model.append(QString("Livestock")); Here's the model I would like to add to the QFileSystemModel QStringList model; model.append(QString("Cats")); model.append(QString("-cats")); model.append(QString("Livestock")); model.append(QString("-") + QString("-")); model.append(QString("-horses")); Then, I want to add this to a QFileSystemModel in the following way. model.append(QString("Cats")); model.append(QString("-cats")); model.append(QString("Livestock")); model.append(QString("-") + QString("-")); model.append(QString("-horses")); QFileSystemModel *filesystem_model = new QFileSystemModel; filesystem_model->setRootPath(QDir::rootPath()); filesystem_model->setNameFilters(model); This is obviously wrong, since it doesn't sort the categories in the desired manner. I'm not even sure if this syntax is correct.
