Rankings for games with at least 4 players as of 22:00 UTC on 4 April 2009, compiled by Jeremy Gallagher. Having previously read through the results, I determined that, aside from the match between the two top players, all the results were decided with a single play during the starting phase with one player receiving win, loss or draw credit, with the final result being determined by the rules during the forcing phase. These games are scheduled to be played each day, at a particular time, at a particular player's home, starting on the following date. The pairings are chosen by lot. Disqualifications and forfeits are determined by the judges with the possibility that they may be appealed by both players. If a game is started with the score at 1-0 in favour of the first player, the second player must win by 11 or more points or they lose, and vice versa. A player may change their mind between attempting a game and any stage before a game begins (including any page or round in which they select the colour they wish to play in) or during a game, and must notify their opponent as soon as possible of their intentions. Games may be dropped, paused or resumed at any time, and judges may clear a game from the chessboard to the schedule at any time. No game will run longer than 40 minutes. In the event that a game runs longer than 40 minutes, the game may be rescheduled to an alternative date, at the option of the player playing this game. If a game is resumed, the player playing the suspended game will assume the black colour and the player whose time was last recorded on the playing clock will assume the white colour. If the white player is waiting to start a game at the time the black player has finished playing, they will play. If the black player is waiting to start a game at the time the white player has finished playing, they will play. If both players are waiting to start a game at the time the black and white clocks are running, each player will play the other player's colour with the exceptions: (1) if a white player's game is on move 40 and the player has not been informed of this and they have played 20 moves and not moved from their current position, then the game will be recorded as a win for white unless the game reverts back to black, and (2) if a black player's game is on move 40 and the player has not been informed of this and they have played 20 moves and not moved from their current
