I am not able to understand what is the difference between -f boot and -E -b. Even after reading two different docs, I am not able to figure out what is the difference between these two. Can anybody please explain? A: -f boot is useful when you are on a live CD and you want to boot the alternate medium while keeping the live session. -E -b is useful when you are on the same medium (that is the live CD, in this case), and you want to have an encrypted filesystem. But I find it hard to understand why you would use one of these on a live CD and not the other. A: -E -b is the equivalent of -b /dev/sda -f. I've never seen -b /dev/sda -f used (not intentionally anyway), but both are very similar. The reason I mentioned -f is I've only ever seen boot -E -b. -E -b is also useful in cases where the alternate medium is not a file/disk partition, but a device, or a block device. ---
