Activity of single neurons in the diencephalon, the midbrain, and the brainstem of the cat has been recorded while animals were presented with visual pattern stimuli. All of the visual thalamic and pretectal units recorded in the light were also recorded in the dark; all of the pretectal units recorded in the dark were also recorded in the light. Most of the nucleus tegmentalis pedunculi units were not activated in the dark, while most of the nucleus tegmentalis oralis units were not activated in the light. 2. Neurons in the reticular formation and nucleus gigantocellularis were activated in the dark but not in the light. The activation of these nuclei in the dark was not correlated with visual stimulation. Neurons in the lateral geniculate nucleus were not activated in either the light or the dark. 3. Most of the caudal divisions of the trigeminal nuclei were not activated in the dark while most of the cuneate nucleus cells and in the parabrachial nuclei cells were inhibited. The animals could be divided into two groups on the basis of the excitatory or inhibitory responses to pattern stimuli. 4. Motions of the eye, head, and body were recorded while the animal was presented with visual pattern stimuli. Most of the neurons in the superior colliculus and the pretectal nuclei were activated during eye or head movements in the light. In contrast, most of the neurons in the superior colliculus were not activated during eye or head movements in the dark. Most of the pretectal units, and all of the parabrachial units, were inhibited during eye or head movements in the dark. Most of the cranial parasympathetic nuclei and the nucleus tractus solitarius, as well as the medial and dorsal nucleus of the vagus, were activated in the dark during eye or head movements in the dark. This was true of the medial, reticular and dorsal vagal nuclei, but was not true for the lateral and ventral nuclei of the vagus. In some animals,
