Schwinn Serial Number Search

In the end, it is up to you to look for a Schwinn bicycle. The good news is that they are still around and you can ride them today. They are still made with some of the same materials. The reconditioned Schwinn bicycles and Schwinn knock-offs that are sold today are built with high quality components and are well maintained. Although Schwinn bicycles are no longer around, the nostalgia of riding a Schwinn is timeless. For more information on the history and future of the Schwinn as a brand, please check out the history and nostalgia pages on Schwinn's website. By the time that Troy Kennedy became the vice president of Schwinn and in charge of the stamping of serial numbers (1928) the clock was definitely ticking. If you look closely you can see that Schwinn serial numbers start in the year (not month) 1901. Up to this point they were hand stamped. After 1928 they were machine stamped. The transition can be seen in Fig. 4. The first two numbers are from a hand stamped bike, in pink, and the next six numbers are from a machine stamped bike. Because of the transition Schwinn became the first company to use numbers for 25 years, from 1901-1926. However, after 1926 some of them were hand stamped while others were machine stamped. This could easily create issues when serial number mismatches do occur. It is important to remember that Schwinn stopped stamping serial numbers in 1938 and resumed them in 1957. By the time that the stamps stopped not only was the company running full tilt, but most of the freeways had been constructed. It is believed that by this time Schwinn had over 27 million motorcycles or bikes produced, not to mention having stamped their first serial number in 1903 on a Model 15 roadster. The Models 22, 33 and 54 were part of their early years. 5ec8ef588b
