To determine whether body mass index (BMI) is associated with impaired insulin sensitivity and bone metabolism, and whether the degree of insulin resistance is associated with a lower bone mass in healthy men, 244 men aged 20-70 years (age: mean: 36.8 years, SD: 10.5) were divided into a high BMI group (BMI ≥ 25 kg/m(2), n = 110) and a normal BMI group (18.5 kg/m(2) \leq BMI < 25 kg/m(2), n = 134). All subjects were free from any disease known to affect the bone metabolism. BMI and insulin sensitivity (Matsuda index) were measured, and serum procollagen type 1 N-terminal propeptide (P1NP) and undercarboxylated osteocalcin (B-Oc) were measured as bone turnover markers. The insulin sensitivity in the high BMI group was significantly lower f988f36e3a
