There are also a few other interesting things of note. There are some new filters, including a new one that automatically creates a fogged out effect. Names in the labels panel were updated, including the creation of a section called "Layers". There are also other changes, but I'm not going into those because there's nothing that will change whether or not you decide to buy Photoshop. Lightroom 5 is a major update with the main focus being to improve performance and make it easier to work with images. In some respects, this is a complete re-write, and there's a lot to get into. Here's what I found when I started to work with the new version of Lightroom 5. As opposed to previous versions of Lightroom, I have a feeling this one is for people who are just getting into the workflow. There is also a new Look View option with the ability to turn the screen black and white, sepia, or grayscale. There is also the option to see what After Effects would look like with various effects. Lightroom can also now be used for people who want to make a video tutorial. But once you've shared a document, you can collaborate in real time with others. They can take a stab at the design, make small changes, and even send the file back to you with comments for further review. Review features include color and design lock; face and hair pickers; comments highlighting; comments in the margins; merge existing comments to a specific location; document history; and a new Share for Review method that files as physical copies if they're shared.

Another major new feature is the ability to import any Design Exchange file — a community initiative designed to establish a workflow among designers about compatible product file formats and how they go about designing. After the announcement of the 3D features, BlogAdobe posted that the next big thing from Adobe was a new update on the Adobe Sensei AI feature powered by Adobe Sensei. The news went viral when it was revealed that added the ability for someone to change the look of a person's eyes for a complete change of look. We can only assume that the image in the demo was edited using the new technology. This new technology of altering the photos you upload can potentially be huge. It will superimpose the changes into the file, and could lead to all kinds of embarrassment. This could lead to the demise of the Journal of an Ordinary Man in the offing. Unfortunately, it's a feature that is nowhere near being ready for production use. Also, the risk is that this could change a person's appearance. Also, for someone like me who is a bit of a perfectionist, even the possible risk of an altered appearance being exposed could be devastating. Even just being one-upped by my friends. In this case I will give myself a 5-, but I'll have to think carefully on whether or not I want to use the feature. The wonderful news is that this is not a preview version of three years down the road. This is real and coming in 2020. It also seems to be heading towards being cross-platform with good news in the future on Linux via GitHub.
