Adobe is always moving forward and on the whole this seems like a good development. I have been using Photoshop since version 2 and lightroom 1 for about 7 years so going through a few transitions. As for the review I thought that it was a good read but the Adobe is a big Company and they do move very fast in some areas and slower in others. There will always be new technology but you have to find the right balance and judging a review is only a part of the picture. I think in my case that a lot of people use Adobe products purely because of the ease of use. I find that some people like to complain about the companies they work for, the amount of change and the user interface is often a factor. I do find a lot of people are unhappy with their programmes so then they seem to put on the proverbial grumpy pants and enjoy complaining about a Company they work for! I have also seen Photoshops CB and CS6 web media I think they could also have mentioned the recent development of the industry standard RAW data format or why the JPEG file format is no longer the number one image type. I am not getting into the details of ABC on this one, because I know a little about that. Even though there are a lot of people complaining about the changes in Adobe products I have to say I love them. Everyone is entitled to their own opinion so that is their choice. I think that these days your own opinion doesn't make much difference anyway because the advertising and PR makes your choice for you very simple to make.
